To better understand the process of platelet aggregation, the effect of various stimuli on platelet aggregation was determined in both whole blood and platelet-rich plasma. We used the platelet aggregation reagents ADP, arachidonic acid, epinephrine, collagen, and thrombin, and several drugs used in clinical practice to inhibit platelet aggregation. Some of these drugs inhibited platelet aggregation in whole blood. However, the same drugs were without an effect on platelet aggregation in platelet-rich plasma. We found that an anti-platelet serum contained antibodies against some stimulants, which inhibit platelet aggregation in whole blood. This approach may prove to be useful in the evaluation of drugs or extracts in vitro. Q: Calculate days and time from
