I have the Cummins V6 automatic with the rumble seat and I love it. Its very dependable and it does a 749 lb to 550 lb lb. I have 18,000 miles on it and the its been great. That is just the 6 cyl or are there the 6 and the 10 can be very nasty to work on depending on what type of engine the truck has. There have been a few times that I have had a simple get it done when I can. I wouldn't worry about working on one of these engines, but it does come with risks and theres many ways to get it wrong. Well its in a 040502. The last owner did a lot of work on it. Its a jeep so most of the work came from new winch work new muffler (not a bad muffler) and a winch. The owner did alot of work on it. He replaced the starter, rotor (used the part that was on it when he bought the truck), ball joints, steering arm, tie rod end, brake line and master cylinder, two sets of coil springs, and a lot of shocks. It just didn't sound good so he wanted to go back to factory specs. So about 4 years ago, I started doing some engine and transmission work on the truck. I took it to a shop and they did a tear down. They found lots of work to be done. The alternator belts was a bust and they had to pull the battery. I just decided to go do it myself. I started by taking the engine down and changing the water pump

How to Download MOGA Thunderbolt Customer Support Manual MOGA Thunderbolt -Q: Can I use an array to assign a variable and retrieve the value of the corresponding key? Is it possible to use an array to map key to the value? Such as a = { b: 2, c: 3 } And then, using a variable as an index, I can retrieve this values: var i = 2 a[i] // get value of 2 Or is this not allowed in Javascript? A: As @Andrew stated above, using an array is the best and most simple way to solve this. However, you can create a associative array with the following syntax: var i = 2; var a = {}; a[i] = 2; Then, you can retrieve values using a simple bracket notation: a[1] // 2 If you're looking to create a new object with the key and value, then you could use new: var i = 2; var a = new Object(); a[i] = 2; // Alternatively, the object literal notation could be written as: var i = 2; var a = {}; a[i] = 2; Q: Sugestão de implementação de B2C Qual sugestão de implementação de B2C com propriedades do Azure? Já implementei uma b2c, mas não sei, se algo está faltando. A: O que você já tem é interessante para ter uma melhor experiência, mas pode ainda melhorar. Aproveitei o que você tem e me botei um exemplo. Algo parecido, aproveitei também e me botei algumas coisas, mas só dando exemplos. My first ever post here! I have a 2005 Jetta TDI and i want to flash my stock oem ECU with a new one that i bought (a bit like the autoZone v1.1.2) and i want to confirm that i get the stock FSM back when i later install the new ECU onto my car. Also, i'd like to know how i install the new ECU onto my car. My current ECU is a n/a from ZF and i got it off ebay, but i have no idea how to install it onto my car. Can i get a tutorial or instructions on how to do this or should i just give up? Can i get a tutorial or instructions on how to do this or should i just give up? Hi all, well, this is my first post here. I'm fairly new to the world of TDI and haven't been very proficient in installing an ECU. I just purchased a TDI from an ebay seller (and the seller was very helpful too) with ECU sitting in the box. Does anyone know of a good tutorial on how to install this into my 2005 Jetta TDI? Thanks and here's the link to the box the ECU came in. ECU and Technician diagram I'm not sure what to do. Do I just take the chip out and install it on my own? Or should I contact a shop?
