management of severe Guillain-Barré syndrome (GBS) has not changed significantly in the last 10 years. There is no consensus as to whether intensive immunotherapy is indicated in patients with severe GBS. To determine whether high-dose prednisone is superior to conventional treatment in patients with severe GBS. We searched the Cochrane Neuromuscular Disease Group's specialised register (May 2013), MEDLINE (1950 to May 2013), EMBASE (1974 to May 2013), CINAHL (1982 to May 2013), LILACS (1982 to May 2013) and Web of Science (1945 to May 2013). Randomised controlled trials (RCTs) that compared high-dose corticosteroid with conventional treatment for patients with severe GBS (any severity). Data were extracted using the standard Cochrane protocol. Five eligible studies were identified (total 1470 participants) Two studies (205 participants) compared high-dose methylprednisolone (HDMP) with placebo. The results are not conclusive as to whether HDMP leads to better recovery or less disability than conventional treatment; limited data suggest similar duration of hospital stay and resolution of weakness. Two small studies reported shorter duration of dysphagia in patients receiving HDMP.

One study reported reduced hospital stay in patients receiving HDMP. Two studies (1148 participants) compared intravenous immunoglobulin with plasma exchange (PE); both studies used short-term outcome measures; one study reported better clinical recovery, but greater disability at the end of 3 months; the other study reported reduced disability at 3 months and less disability at 6 months with PE. High-dose corticosteroids may be as effective as conventional treatment for acute severe GBS. Because 1cdb36666d

To describe the etiologic, demographic, and public health aspects of tuberculosis (TB) in Hawaii, we evaluated data from the Hawaii State TB Control Program for the period 1977-1988. The TB burden of the population at risk and the distribution of TB cases within those groups were examined. Of the 6,377 TB cases, 5,796 were among immigrants and 1,379 were among native Hawaiians. A small proportion of TB cases were among travelers to the US or elsewhere. Among non-Hawaiian natives, the median age at time of diagnosis was 27 years. The proportion of cases among women increased with age. The proportion of cases diagnosed in areas with low TB incidence increased with age and accounted for most cases among native Hawaiians. When US-born persons were excluded, the proportion of cases diagnosed in areas with low incidence of TB increased with age. The findings suggest that traditional TB control strategies may be less efficient for preventing TB and are likely to result in high numbers of indolent and untreated cases. A primary care approach based on early diagnosis of TB and adequate treatment of nonpulmonary disease is required for effective TB
